

Besides the great satisfaction of doing a worthwhile job, St. Francis' men in Mexico enjoyed the lush, sub-tropical scenery of Valle de Bravo.

Terriers Travel

Encouraged by successful Summer work projects in the Mexican villages of Zinepecaro and Valle de Bravo in 1962 the Terrier peace corps, that nebulous, officerless organization known as St. Francis Students Abroad, scheduled a second expedition, this one to Peru. Dr. Ellis, Director of the Latin American Studies Program, flew down to South America during the inter-term recess to work out arrangements. Initial target for Summer 1963 was the slums of the city of Arequiba.

Greatest obstacle to overcome was lack of funds but money was solicited from a variety of sources. Students paid to watch faculty athletes stumble down the basketball court in a game against Project Peru hopefuls. The Brooklyn community was alerted to the needs of our little force. Raffles and dances garnered additional specie.

The isolationist faction of the lounge twitched more and more uneasily as the Summer grew nearer. We waited and watched, apprehensively, impatiently . . . for something to happen. It had to. We knew. Incredible things are going on in this wide, wide world of ours.

Half the fun is getting there. And getting there means raising money. Raising money means throwing a dance or two. Mark Thomas and guest in action.
