Individual Scoring—Junior Varsity

	F.Gs.	Fouls.	Total.
Henrick	80	68	228
O'Connor	91	44	226
Flynn	50	24	124
Paterno	44	25	113
Baugh	34	34	102
Louisi	31	14	76
Webb	28	10	66
Healy	4	11	19
Basile	6	6	18
Wall	3	3	9
Fitzgerald	1	4	6
King	3	0	6
Latino	1	1	3
Massimo	0	2	2
Loughlin	0	0	0
Reardon	0	0	0
Totals	376	242	994

The Disappearance of Chief Blackjack

Madison Square Garden, Ned Irish's basketball Mecca of the East, was the scene of an amazing crime on the afternoon of March 7, 1947. Shortly after noon, three sharp characters pulled up in front of the vast arena and entered. Posing as St. John's University students, they gained entrance under the pretext of taking pictures of Chief Blackjack, beloved leader of the Redmen tribe, who was temporarily pitching his tepee in the spacious Garden. Asking for and receiving permission to take the pictures outside because of better light, the arch-criminals graciously escorted the Chief to the 50th Street entrance. Once outside, however, the culprits unceremoniously dumped the exalted Chief into a powerful sedan which had arrived on the spot with perfect timing. In a twinkling, the crime car had been swallowed up in midtown traffic. The deed had been done.

Eye-witnesses differed (as eye-witnesses will) as to the descriptions of the kidnappers and their get-away vehicle. Investigators were nonplussed as every trail they followed became a dead-end. The Chief's loyal subjects were indignant.

The follow-up was not long in coming. A ransom note arrived at St. John's early the next morning threatening that the Chief would be chewed into splinters unless three Redmen made their appearance at a Terrier Rally some hours before game-time on March 11th. The note was signed by "Dangerous Dan," the St. Francis Terrier. The Redman reply was in kind—Hal Grady, red-headed Terrier star forward, was threatened with the same treatment that Chief Blackjack had received. Fearing a "commando raid," the organizers ordered a protection squad to keep their eyes on "objective Grady." Subsequent events, or