The Duns Scotus Honor Society was founded in 1934 by the dean of the college, Rev. Dr. James A. Sullivan. Its first, and to this day, only moderator has been Brother Leo Quinn. As evident in its title, it has taken the name of the medieval Franciscan scholar-theologian, John Duns Scotus.

It was the original intention of the society, and has remained so through the years, to lay stress on the well-rounded individual. The candidate must show a love and desire for scholarship and have at least a 3.0 cumulative index. The candidate must also manifest in himself leadership and a concerned involvement in the activities of the college and of the world in which we live.

Past members of the honor society have included men who are now prominent lawyers, doctors, college deans, and members of many other professions in which they have received positions of the highest merit and respect.
