INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS CLUB

Joe Murphy and John Milewski obtain a further insight into the complexities of labor unions, their internal organization and their problems from Mr. David Wells.

The International Relations Club was organized to stimulate interest in world affairs. Guest speakers from all over the world give informative talks to members.

The annual political symposium in October dealt with the problems of the steel strike. Several weeks later Dr. George Westerman, Panamanian Ambassador to the U.N., addressed the entire student body.

The I.R.C. also presented a series of informative films for the students at large, and sponsored its second Annual Political Convention for high school seniors and guests of political and international importance in its efforts to fulfill its objective.

Mr. George Westerman, Panamanian Ambassador to the United Nations, receives a prolonged ovation after his address on Canal Zone problems.

Mr. David Wells of the I.L.G.W.U. discussed the position taken by organized labor regarding the strike in the steel industry at the Political Symposium.

Mr. Joseph Ellis, I.R.C. moderator, chats with the National Association of Manufacturers' representative at the Political Symposium, Mr. Robert Maher, concerning management's position during the long steel strike. Mike Zufolo and Joe Mingione wait for a pause in the conversation to express their views.

One of the highlights of the I.R.C.'s activities was a lecture by a member of the Henry George School.
