

JAMES A. KELLY HISTORICAL INSTITUTE

Arthur J. Konop received calls from neighboring states as they prepared for the Bicentennial.

John Grzanka helps to organize and decode original documents.

The James A. Kelly Institute for Local Historical Studies of St. Francis College was created in 1973 and named for the late Borough Historian of Brooklyn.

It houses one of New York's largest collections of primary source records on Local History. Original charters of the Dutch and English Governors, Indian deeds, Town Records and miscellaneous documentations account for over three million pieces.

The map used for the front endsheet as well as the line drawings used for divider pages were obtained from the Institute's collection.

The Congressman John Rooney and Congressman Eugene Keogh Collections, Alderman Peter McGuinness Collection and Francis Sinott papers as well as a number of political scrapbooks and memorabilia have been added for the scholars and students of Urban Politics to research.

The Institute is open to the general public, teachers and students alike.

the voice

RANDOM
NOTES...
EDITORIALS

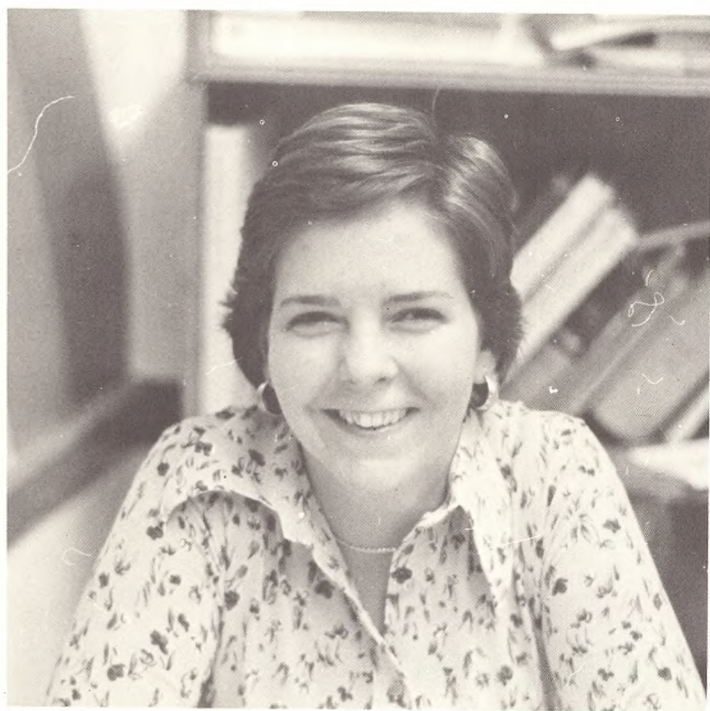

Kevin Nash, Assistant Editor

Tom Iannaccone, Editor-in-chief

Joe Anelli, Associate Editor

Lynn Archioli, Production Editor