The "credit card" will come into its own at St. Francis College in September with the initiation of a charge plate system for borrowing books from the McGarry Memorial Library. The system will replace the present method of signing the date cards.

Other future plans include a proposed merger to create a centralized library for the colleges in downtown Brooklyn. The centralization which will be handled by the college librarians and presidents is sanctioned by the Council of Higher Educational Institutes of New York City. The nucleus of the plan is a research center for graduate and undergraduate students.

During the past year, the number of books cataloged was an amazing 4000. These were added to the current collection of some 35,000 volumes. At this rate, the library will reach standard library circulation within ten years. The various divisions assisted in the selection of books through the submission of lists of desired texts. New records have also been ordered.

Relief from the heat of the summer months was provided with the installation of an air conditioning system during the Christmas holidays.

The language laboratory which had its first full year in operation ran into difficulties due to the mistreatment of tapes and machines. The library staff is studying new plans to prevent a recurrence of this in the next school year.
