

Gifted in natural ability and in size of stature, Jim is well known at St. Francis. His activities on the court, his ready flow of impromptu speech on any occasion have made him liked by his classmates. Boasting of more than athletic prowess, James is stocked with a wealth of common sense. A laugh, a witticism, a handshake, and Jim can make anyone forget what he started to say. The big fellow has "enough on the ball" to get him through almost any situation.

Red hair, freckled face, big smile, Ed has all the qualities that such physical characteristics indicate. Quiet and unobtrusive, Ed goes about his tasks with an ease and accomplishment that is enviable. Since he has been here with us, he has given us a new personality that we all like and admire. In his spare moments, Ed has worked hard in the Sodality and To Kalon K'Agathon. No one would bet that the smiling, quiet lad will ever change.

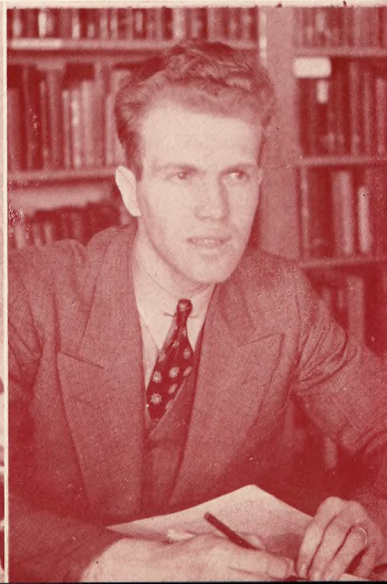

Mr. Sheed, Brother Jerome, and Major Barron go into conference after education's trial. The defense won.

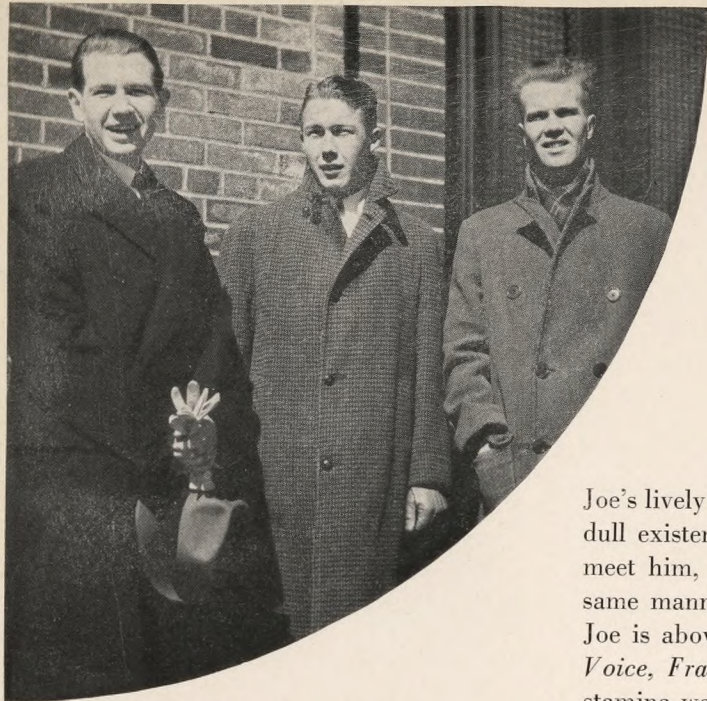

It's hard to describe Jerry. Possessing a varied ability, he shines on the basketball court and in the classroom. Long hours of basketball practice served only to improve his marks. With a laugh that cheers and a sunny disposition, Jerry has made himself respected and liked by all his classmates. Jerry was always among the first to give a hand and see the job through. Whatever may be said of this lad can only be good.

"What's the matter, Joe?"

"The Dragon Lady's my type."

"How many words to an inch?"

Mahoney, Pinne, and O'Neill, senior representatives to the council, await Easter Pontifical Mass.

"Me and Pete McGuinness," describes Fred in a nut-shell. As a politician and a man of experience, he has no equal. Always ready with a blunt statement that never fails to rock his listeners with laughter, Fred is more than welcome in any gab-fest. But Fred's words of wisdom have a good foundation. A good student, our club-man, Fred manages to find time to bowl them over in the Greenpoint manner at the inter-class battles.

Joe's lively way allows him to transform an ordinary dull existence into a fantasy of glee. Whenever we meet him, whatever he's doing, he always has the same manner. Humorous, studious, and ambitious, Joe is above all a dispenser of cheer. Work on the Voice, Franciscan, on every activity that required stamina was eased by "big" Joe's presence. We like to remember Joe as a grand fellow, a good friend who knows no bounds when it comes to giving a hand.

If Lindberg and Byrd are praised for their adventures, then surely Ken must receive a medal. From far off Jersey he treads his way to St. Francis braving heat, cold, and storm. Evidently the trip has had little effect on the man. His ambition in the laboratory and his seriousness in the class are undaunted. Although he is anything but loquacious, his frequent subtle humor is all the more appreciated. The class likes his ways.
