

The Sodality

ANXIOUS to see the religious functions of the College grow both in number and in participation on the part of the student, the Sodality during the past year directed its every effort in bringing to the fore the spiritual aspects of college life. Invoking the aid of the Blessed Virgin Mary, its patron, this group with the assistance of its moderator, Fr. Fleming, undertook a program highlighted by First Friday Mass, Communion and Holy Hour, and October devotions to Our Lady. Through "the Sodalist", a monthly bulletin edited by Andy Castagliola, the Sodality fostered an intelligent and active interest in the doctrines and practice of the Catholic faith.

WHILE learning parliamentary procedure and the ways of men, the Student Council played its role well during this, the year of the '49ers. As mediator between students and the Administration the Council governed all student non-athletic activities in an efficient and orderly manner. Though keeping in mind at all times the interests of the body which they were representing, this group went all out in its efforts to merit the wide range of thought granted by the Administration.

Under the presidency of Rog Egan and Ed Fountaine freedom of debate was always guaranteed, and they supplied the restraint as needed.

Proud of the College which they as a group were representing, the Council strove to offer to the College something in which it might find satisfaction. This desire was satisfied for the Council afforded to the Student true representation; to the Administration—cooperation; to those outside our institution a shining example of earnest and constructive activity.
