

The Science Club

WHEN the Indicator and Mendel Clubs found it necessary to combine and function as one, the Science Club was born; the year was 1954. In its present structure, the Science Club familiarizes its members with the newest developments in the scientific world through a program of lectures presented by prominent persons in the fields involved.

DAVID MATHIS

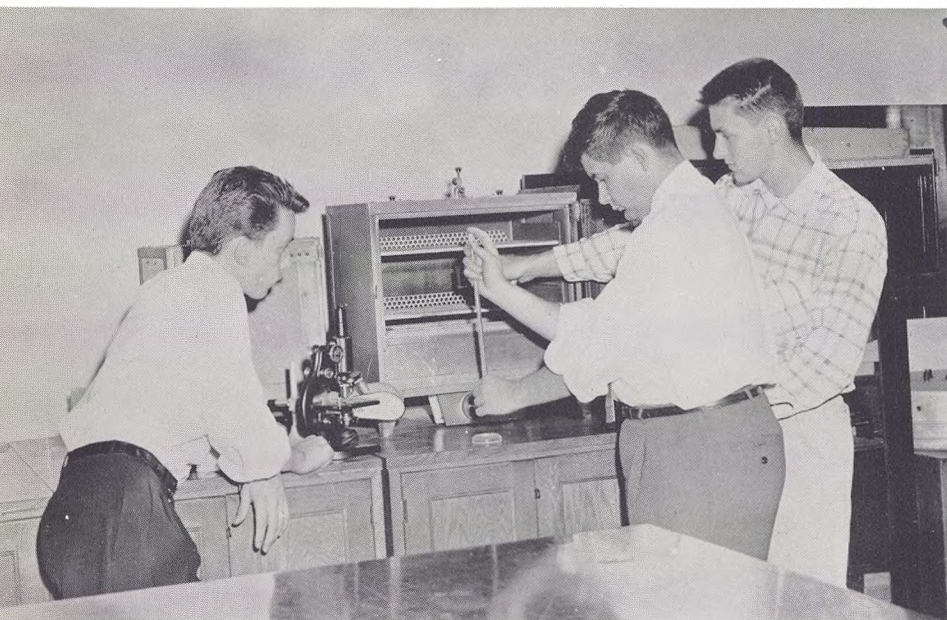

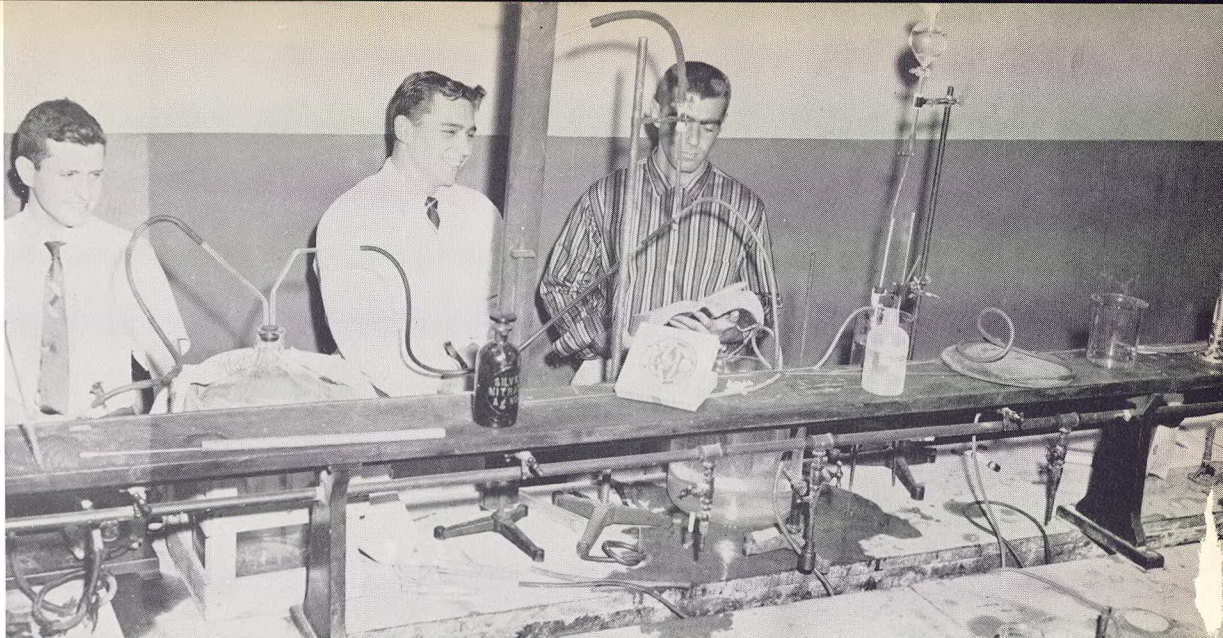

David Mathis and Eugene Font combine club activities with regular laboratory work.

As the scientific future becomes even brighter, these men look forward to the day when they will add to man's ever-growing knowledge of the world and the galaxies surrounding it.

A small sampling of lab equipment almost obscures Monroe Harris, Mike Ierardi, and William Whelan as they attempt to fathom one of nature's secrets.

Many members like Pete Frisko, Dave Mathis, and Gerald Curtin spend their free hours in one of the school's laboratories.
