KNEELING: Ed Wienberg (if.), Joe Wengler (ss.), Tony Costantino (c.), Frank Sainato (2b), Carmine Giordano (ut.). STANDING: Bill Paterno (1b.), Bob Webb (p.), Jack Dougherty (p.), Frank Ahern (cf.), Bob Conover (3b.), Joe Congedo (c.), Herb Wood (of.), Frank Kaiven (p.), Capt. Leo Walsh (lf.), Frank Ghiorso (p.), Frank Sidoti (ut.), Chris Mega (c.), Adolf Gobel (ut.), Sam D'Agostino (rf.).

When the call went out for baseball practice this Spring, coach Dan Lynch had seven hold-overs from last year's team which had compiled a 7-8 record. Pitchers Jack Dougherty, Frank Kaiven, and Bob Webb, together with first baseman Bill Paterno, and outfielders Sam D'Agostino, Leo Walsh, and Herb Wood were the returning veterans.

Southpaw Frank Kaiven who had a 2-2 record and ERA of 3.24 in '49 was the leading moundsman. He was to receive help from soph Frank Ghiorso. Pitcher Bob Johnson who had a 3-0 record and a ERA of 0.81 in 1949 would be sorely missed by the team. Webb and Dougherty were used as spot pitchers.

Hard hitting Paterno was a fixture at first base and the rest of the infield posts were held down by sophomores. Joe Wengler at short covered plenty of ground and was always hustling. In the outfield, Capt. Leo Walsh played a fine, steady game, always alert and coming through with the right play and hit when it counted most. Frank Ahern won the center field position over defensive player Herb Wood. Rightfielder Sam D'Agostino was a heavy hitter but a old shoulder injury hampered his throwing. Sam's extra base blows helped the team push across those runs.

Able Tony Costantino won the catching job and received support from promising Chris Mega. It was felt that if the three soph's in the infield could hold up, the team would be worthy of respect. The pitching was considered fair, the outfield with a veteran trio was set; if the infield could make the double-play and back up the pitching, then it was believed that the Terriers could field a balanced team.
